

Bruce Stenslie is the president and CEO of the Economic development Collaborative-Ventura County (EDC-VC). The EDC-VC is a public/private partnership, providing business advising, training and capital access services to promote regional economic vitality, business expansion and job growth.

Prior to joining EDC-VC, Stenslie served as Deputy Director for the California Workforce Association, Executive Director for Workforce Policy and Workforce Investment Board for the Mayor's office in Los Angeles, Deputy Director of the Ventura County Human Services Agency and Executive Director of Workforce Investment Board, and Executive Director of the Candelaria American Indian Council, providing workforce and community development services throughout 11 California counties.

In 2013, Stenslie's peers elected him as the Chair of the California Association of Local Economic Development. Stenslie also serves on the Board of Directors for several state and local organizations which include: California Enterprise Development Authority, TEAM California, California Manufacturing Health and Welfare Trust, First 5 Ventura County, and Community Action Ventura County.

Bruce is a frequently invited speaker at workforce and economic development forums, addressing the strengths of the regions;s economy, local labor market conditions and economic development strategy and service.